Milan, June 20. They write from Coma, and other Places on the Borders of the Adda, that the Melting of the Snow upon the Mountains, and the prodigeous Quantities of Rain that have lately fallen in thoſe Parts, have ſo raiſed the Waters of that River, as to overflow its Banks in ſeveral Places, by which great Quantities of Land are laid under Water, and many Perſons have received conſiderable Damage. And by Letters from the Cremoneſe and the Parmeſan we are likewiſe informed, that the Waters of the Po have lately roſe ſo high, that they were in great Fear leaſt that River ſhould alſo overflow its Banks, but by the Accounts we received Yeſterday, the Waters were conſiderably fallen.
